Hockey Helmets

When it comes to buying a hockey helmet, the fit is the number one thing you want to consider. It doesn't matter if you have the best helmet on the market if it's too big and will fly off when you get hit.

The three things you want to check when it comes to fit is the helmet itself, the cage, and the chin cup. Not everyone wears a cage, though, which we'll get into below. One thing to consider when getting a cage though is to make sure it fits. When buying combo helmets, you may be large for the helmet but not for the cage. Now this might now be common, but something you want to check out when trying on your helmet. You can always buy a separate cage and switch it with the one that doesn't fit.

GAMFU Hockey helmets come in a variety of sizes. So you don't have to worry about buying Youth, Junior, or Senior, but rather small, medium, large or extra large. This means that the list of features below works for everyone looking for a great helmet to pick up.

The sizings of the helmets usually run up against each other. So a large, adjusted as small as possible, is pretty equal to a medium which is adjusted as large as possible.

When finding the right size for your helmet, you'll want to measure the circumference (all the way around) of your head at about 1 inch above your eyebrows, or if you know your hat size, you can usually see that on the sizing charts on the sales page of the helmet you want.

Features:

- Full coverage for the face with part forehead coverage
- Clear for enhanced visibility
- Soft fill padded foam sections for increased comfort
- Redesigned strapping system for a more secure and comfortable fit
